RONDA ROUSEY IN MMA

- First woman to sign with UFC.
- First female champion UFC.
- Impressive win records with quick submission.
- Dominant in a men's field sport , creating an opportunity for a lot of other women.

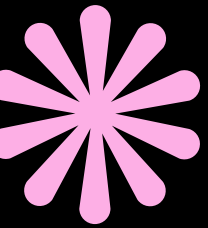

FEMININE EMPOWERMENT

- Rousey has proven that women can compete at the highest levels in a tough sport like MMA.
- It has increased the visibility of women in sports, changing the perception of female athletes.
- She paved the way for other fighters, such as Amanda Nunes and Valentina Shevchenko, who continue to shine in the UFC today.

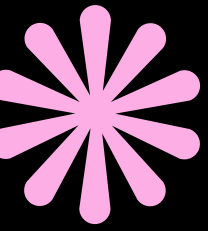

DIFFICULTIES

- Ronda was criticized for her attitude and for some losses, such as the one against Holly Holm.
- Criticism regarding her handling of the defeat and the perception of arrogance.
- Difficulty in maintaining a balance between her champion status and the challenges outside the ring.

FROM MMA TO WWE

- After leaving MMA, Rousey moved to WWE, where she achieved success as a professional wrestler.
- The passage was not always well seen by MMA purists, but she continued to shine in wrestling, remaining a reference figure.

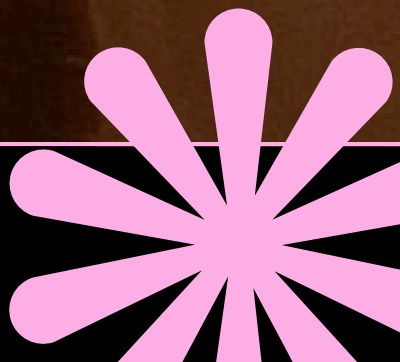

SPORTS

Ronda played many sports:

Judo, mixed martial arts and wrestling but what she has dedicated all her life is judo....

Her success began in 2001 when at just fourteen she won the Coupe Canada Senior Tournament.

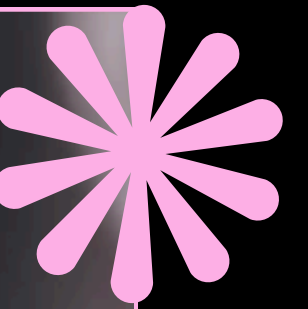

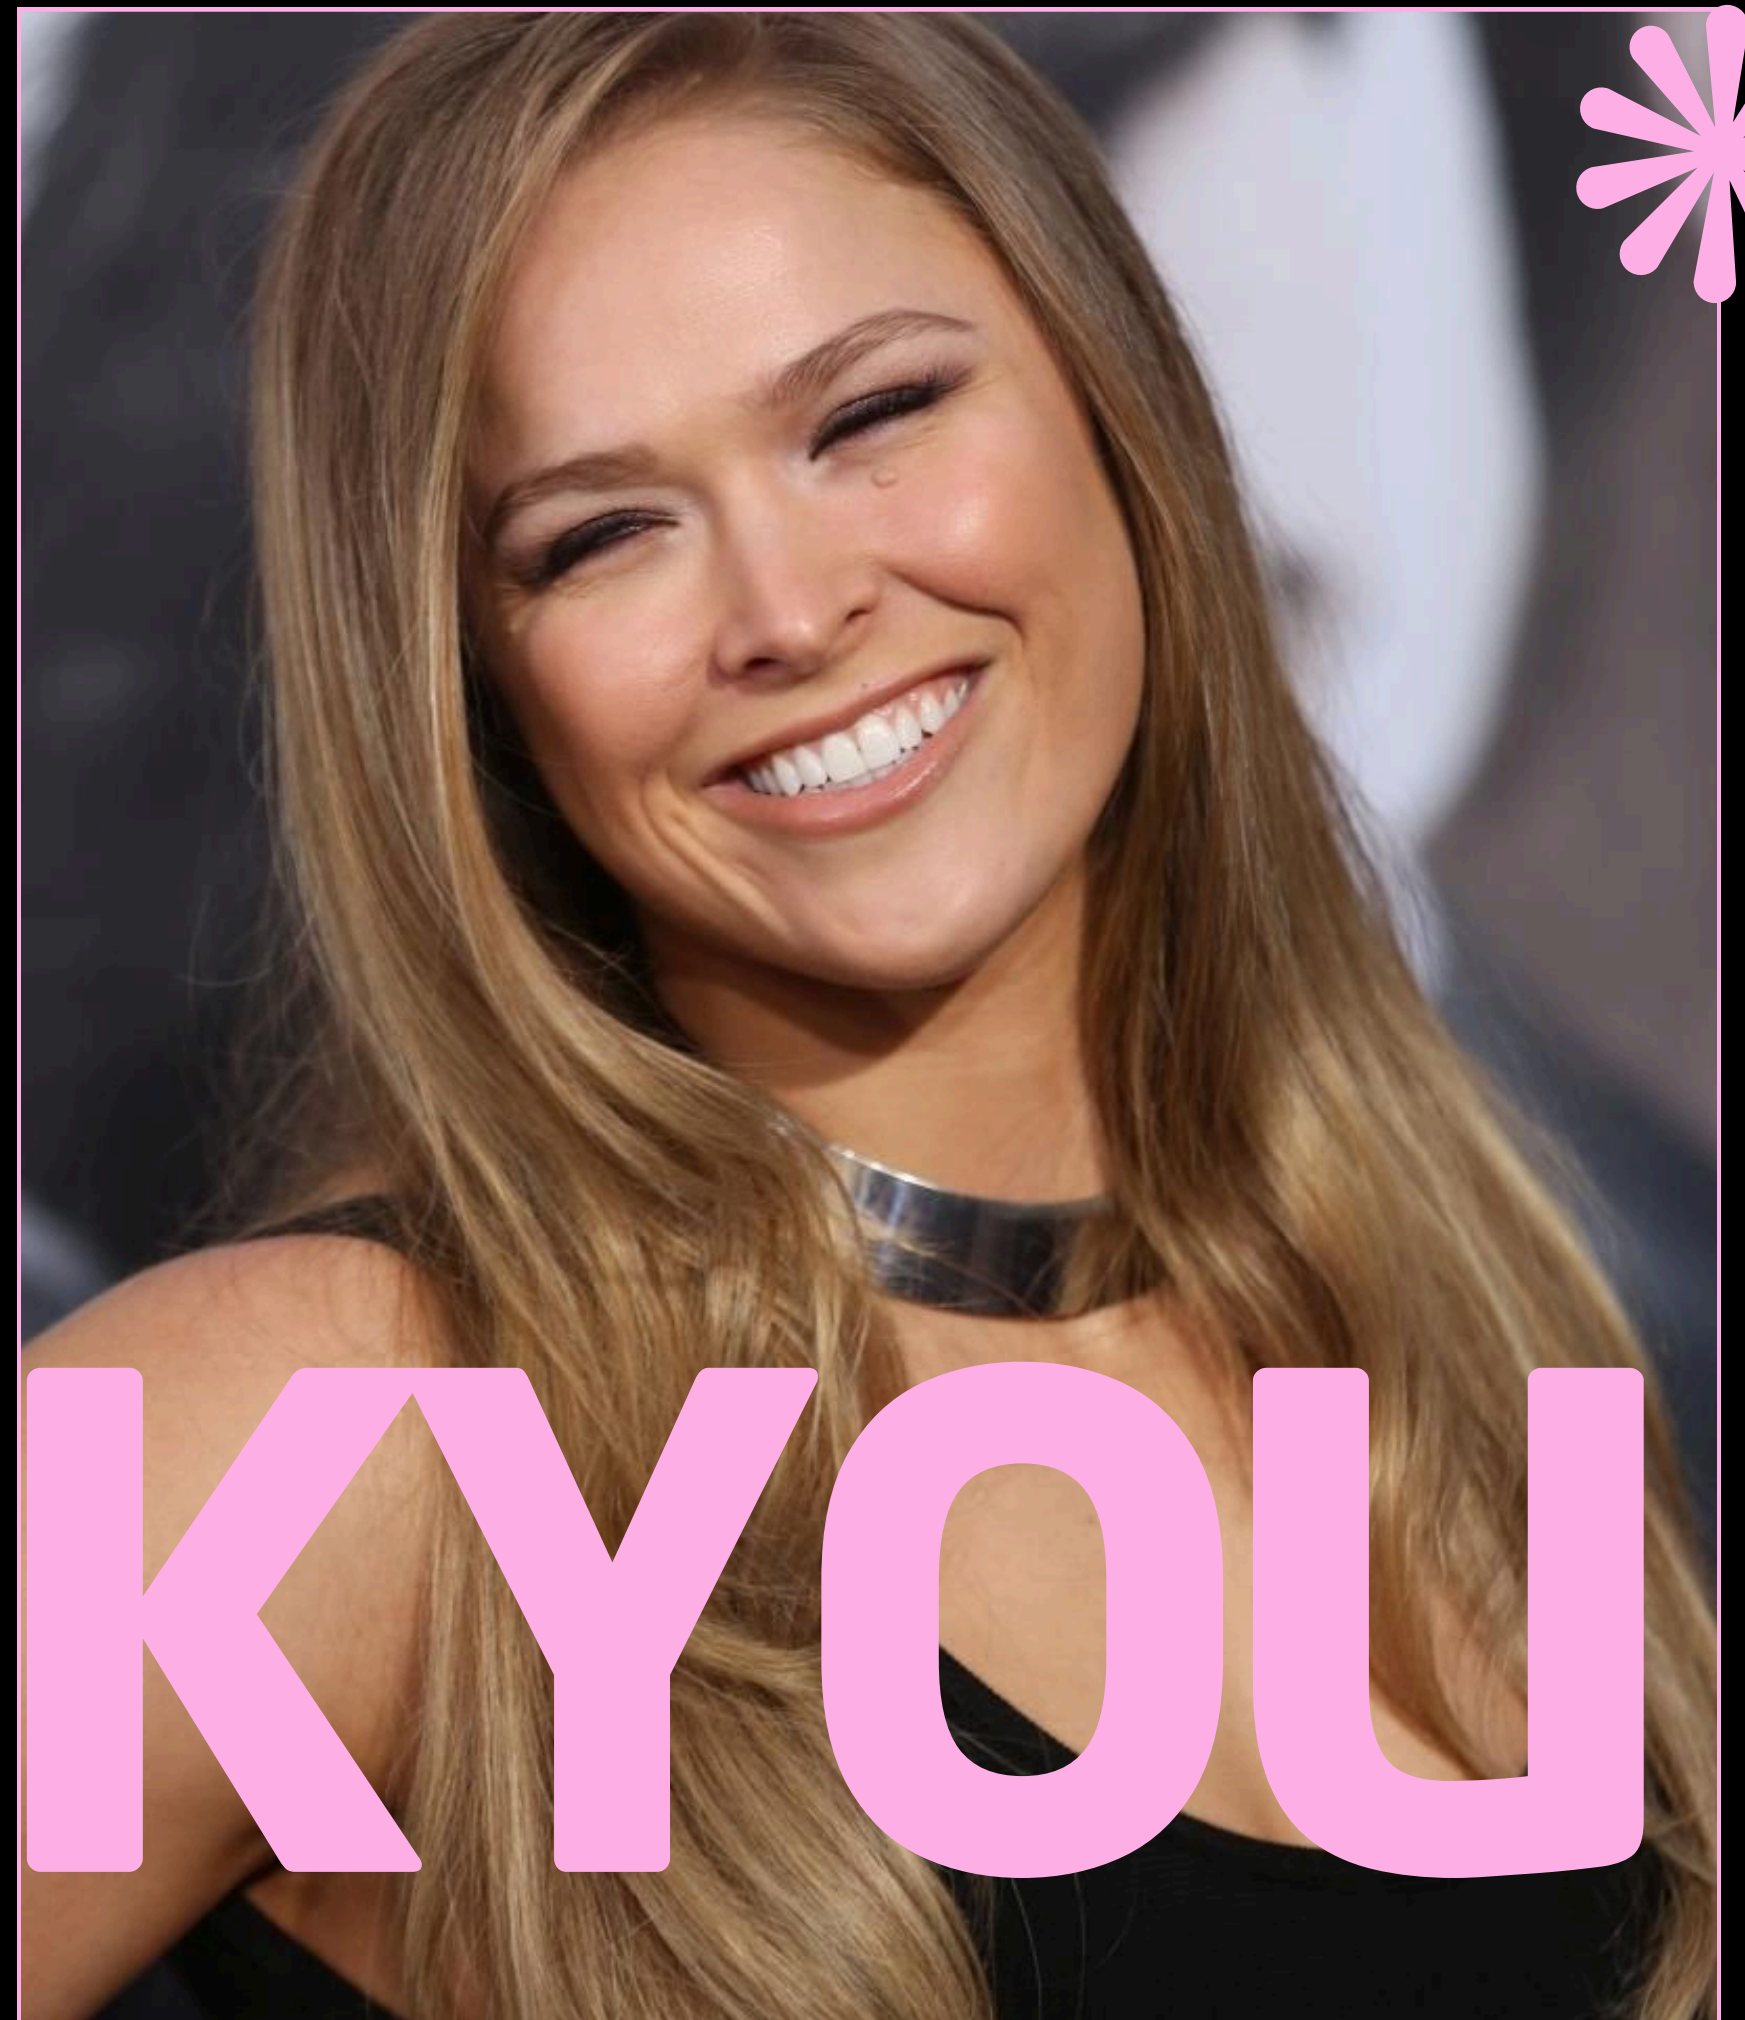

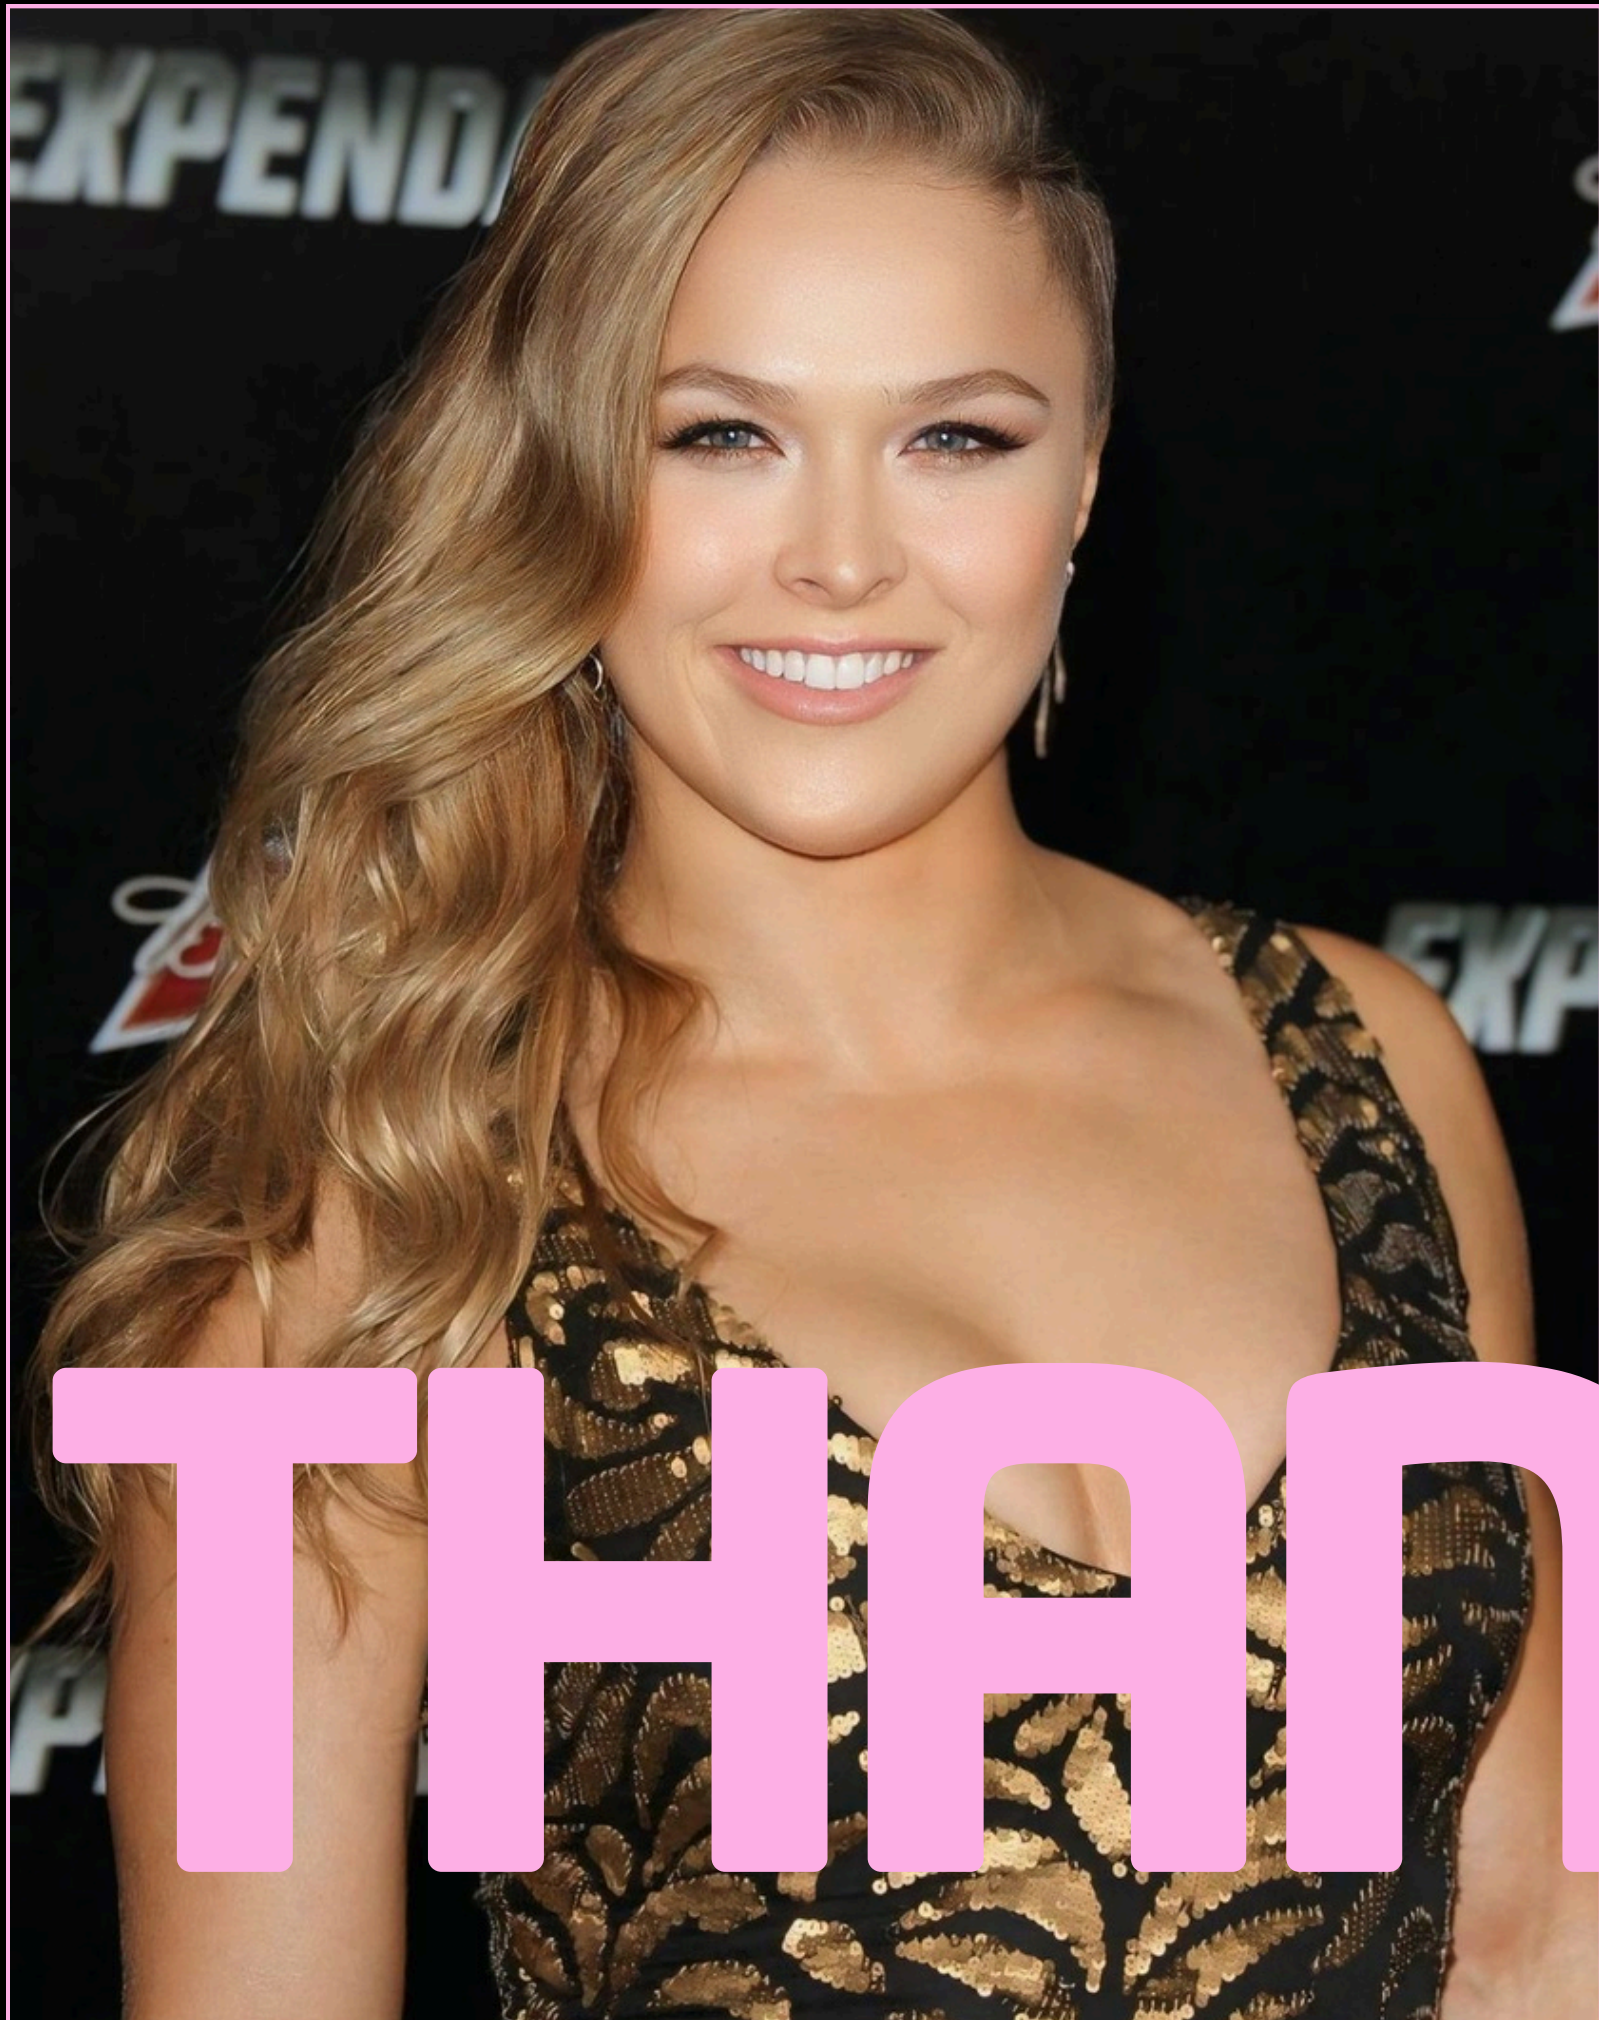

In 2004 she qualified for the Athens Olympics, where she was the youngest judoka of the tournament; she has eliminated in the first round by Austrian Claudia Heill.

In 2006 she became the first American athlete in ten years to win an A-level tournament, at the World Championships in Birmingham. The same year she also won a bronze medal at the Junior World Championships, becoming the first US athlete to win two medals at the Junior World Championships. In 2007 she moved to the 70 kg category, in which she won the silver medal at the World Championships in Rio de Janeiro.

Ronda took part in the expedition for the Beijing 2008 Olympics, she was defeated in the quarter-finals by the former World Champion but in the repêchage valid for the two bronze medals available. Rondo defeated all three of her opponents and won the first Olympic medal in women's judo in the history of the United States.
